Dear Parents and Carers,

Crisp and Brighter Days

*'Leaves curl in splendour,
Red, yellow and brown,
Crisp under wellies,
Through parks in town'*

Sadly, London's parks and gardens are likely to be sodden and muddy this weekend. The above lines from Freddie McKeown's poem October are a celebration of autumn at its finest. Let's hope that we can enjoy some crisp, brighter days again soon. Despite the wet and exceptionally windy start this morning, pupils arrived promptly, their notion of tardiness by now acute, with an eager and overtly cheerful demeanour. Attendance is an impressive 98%.

Great Expectations

Earlier this week, the Year 6 scholars began to study Charles Dickens' Oliver Twist. Last month they immersed themselves in Oscar Wilde's The Selfish Giant and Blake's The Tyger. Later this term, they will explore Romeo and Juliet and Rupert Brooke's The Soldier. Pre-pandemic visitors to the school frequently commented effusively in regard to our Year 6 writing. I attribute much of the success in this discipline to the quality of the literature that is taught. If recent essays scribed by the current cohort are anything to go by, it is fair to say that we have great expectations of them in regard to this final and incredibly important year of primary education.

Wholly Remiss

It would be wholly remiss not to briefly mention the new children who joined us in September. They are all absolutely delightful, including those who have embarked upon an odyssey of sorts in the Nursery.

Yours sincerely,

DM Sellens
